

Why trying to “fix it” by regulating our way out of it,
won’t work

As we have learned so far, the whole foundation of the industry structure is based on the ACA. The ACA has been challenged and parts have been found to be unconstitutional, most recently “preventative services.” This has blown holes in the foundation that cannot be properly repaired with regulation band-aids.

The massive amount of regulations that have been spawned from this legislation would take years to effectively read and change one by one.

A rip and replace approach changes the foundational structure to a secure and sustainable one, and provides a unique opportunity to nullify all the downstream micro-managing regulations in the system.
